If you've scanned a document with your scanner or phone and have the image as a JPG file, it's often useful to convert that image to a PDF. Using Adobe Acrobat, you can even automatically process text within the image so that it's easily searchable by anyone you send the image to. You can use Adobe's Acrobat software, known for its PDF editing abilities, to convert an image to a PDF. Within the program, click the "Enhance Scans" button. Then, click "Select a File" and choose the JPG or other image file that you want to convert to a PDF. If there is text in the image that you want to convert to searchable, selectable text with optical character recognition, click "Recognize Text." Indicate where in the document you want to find text and what language it's likely to be in, and then click "Recognize Text." Click on the "Correct Suspects" button, indicated with a magnifying glass, and Acrobat will prompt you about text that seems unclear so that you can correct any image recognition errors before finalizing the document. When you're satisfied, click "Done." Click the "Save" button and save your document so that it's ready to share with other people. Acrobat isn't the only tool you can use to turn a JPEG file or other image into a searchable PDF. There's an Adobe Scan to PDF tool that you can download for your smartphone that will enable you to use the device essentially as a handheld scanner, shooting photos that can be converted into text-processed PDFs. Files can be further touched up in Acrobat Pro once the PDFs are created. The app, called Adobe Scan, is available in the Google Play Store and iPhone App Store. Other apps, too, are available in the app markets to convert images and camera footage into usable PDFs, and they can be useful for snapping pictures of contracts, receipts and other documents on the go when you don't have a full scanner available. You can also print a JPG image to PDF from many Windows or MacOS programs, though you generally won't be able to search the text within a PDF created that way. To do so on Windows, go to the "File" menu, click "Print" and as the printer, select "Print to PDF." When you click print, choose a file name for the PDF that you want to create.
